Cheers

Look Al, that's funny

OKTOBERFEST was a good and successful day, as is usual. There were 162 names on the attending sheet for the German sausage man to bring along and cook the sausages without running out, unfortunately only up to 120 people turned up. This was very disappointing as only four people notified the Social Committee that they would not be coming. So the tables and chairs were set up for 160 people. Free events may become a thing of the past, if people want to support an event and put their name down and something changes you could at least let an organiser know. There is a lot of work and cost involved in setting up for these events.
Social Committee.

Prost!

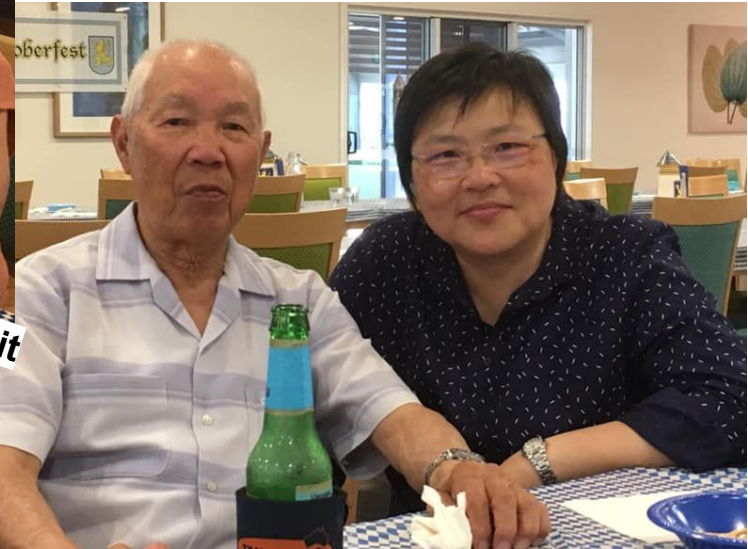

Noch ein Bier, bitte 😊

I can see a $50 note in there!

Gemütlichkeit

No. I don't have a light

A brand new festival is being developed to mark the beginning of the turtle season.

The festival will celebrate our region's iconic turtle encounters, connecting to salt water and fresh water country and encompassing the broader and complimentary themes of environmental care, connection to the Southern Great Barrier Reef, water catchments and local storytelling, making the festival unique to this region.

Through an arts and culture framework, the festival will provide a range of opportunities for artists, arts and community organisations to get involved.

Turtles, arts, culture and Indigenous heritage are the foundation pillars for the festival that will celebrate the unique identity, spirit and livability of the Bundaberg Region.
